Breaking: Local 'Crypto' nerd creates 'strayacoin' over the Australia Day weekend in response to tight ass mate; promises that strayacoin will disrupt all the things.

Whilst some people decide to undertake a project such as renovating a house or digging a garden bed over the Australia Day long weekend, how many people can lay claim to creating their own entire financial ecosystem? Well, a local 'crypto' (digital currency) development team has done exactly that, and faster than you can say 'Dapto Dogs.' CEO of 47.com.au, (a leading Australian crypto development lab based in Bendigo Australia) Jack Hurley was prompted to develop the 'strayacoin' after being caught one too many times at the pub with a mate who had 'long pockets and short arms.' Upon realizing there was a need for a uniquely Aussie crypto coin, Hurley approached several collaborators including artist Aaron Tyler, and some speedy work over the weekend has resulted in the 'strayacoin' that is now available for mining and usage. In a nod to the spirit of Australia Day, the total number of 'strayacoins' that will ever be created (24809843 million) has been designed to match the population of Australia as of Australia Day, January 26th, 2018.

Built on the same crypto-architecture as 'Litecoin', strayacoin is a fancy pants digital currency that enables Aussies to send bucks to anyone out yonder or OS, instantly and for next to nix. strayacoin uses peer-to-peer tech to get the job done with no central authority: managing transactions and issuing the strayacoin cryptocurrency is carried out by all members in the network. Although Aussies have taken to crypto faster than a rat up a drainpipe, examples of locally developed crypto solutions have been rarer than hen's teeth. Strayacoin is a fair dinkum peer-to-peer payment solution that can be applied across a massive number of uniquely Australian financial and transactional problems. For example, using strayacoin means that the days of waiting for a mate to pay-up for the backyard 'cashie' from a month ago with an out of date slab of Toohey's New are gone. 'Davo' can now pay with 'strayacoin' on the spot. Rippa!

As platforms like Facebook Marketplace explode locally and move commerce to very local levels, the strayacoin will be more popular than a Bunnings snag because transactions can now be cashless and therefore much safer. Hurley closed by stating 'we think Aussies are ready for this and are as toey as Roman sandals to start using the strayacoin. As a result, we've built the strayacoin system to have one coin for every Aussie, and of course the coins themselves are divisible into smaller units and exchange for other crypto and regular currencies.

strayacoin launched on January 26th, Australia Day 2018, and is available from wherever you acquire your digital currencies.
